INTRODUCTION

Food security, as defined by the United Nations’ Committee on World Food Security, is the condition in which all people, at all times, have physical, social and economic access to sufficient safe and nutritious food that meets their dietary needs and food preferences for an active and healthy life. There are numerous causes of food insecurity, including population growth and rising food, transportation, and agricultural costs. In line with the SDGs, most apparently Goal 2, its discourse is unquestionably timely. World hunger and malnutrition are on the rise again, and the world population continues to grow causing mounting pressure on our food systems.

It is estimated that by 2050 there will be 9 billion people in the world and they will all need sufficient safe and nutritious food. Some of the people left most vulnerable to the dangers of food insecurity are the young people. As the world’s population increases and drives up the global demand for food, a demographic phenomenon known as the youth bulge, comprises of 1.2 billion youth between the ages of 15 and 24, is simultaneously affecting the ability of youth to enter the job market in many developing countries.

The majority of the world’s youth, about 85% of them live in the developing world, where they make up on average about 20% of any given country’s population. Simultaneously, there is ongoing discussion that youth have an important role to play in strengthening global food security. Indeed, it is worth considering how such a global demographic dividend relates to global food security.

Global hunger is affecting 38 million more people than the previous year, and a staggering 2 billion people are not consuming adequate amounts of micronutrients like iron and vitamins. That is why it is imperative that today's youth are engaged in the decisions that will affect their future and that the next generation of agricultural and food production are empowered. It is also more important than ever to create opportunities for young people in rural areas, particularly in the area of food production.

Global Food Production must increase by 70 percent by 2050 to keep pace with increasing demand and changing diets of the world's rapidly increasing population, the majority of whom will be children and youth. With that in mind, we selected the theme for the Global Food Security Conference to be "Youth Step Up To Achieve Food Security".

THEME

The theme for the Global Food Security Conference "Youth Step Up To Achieve Food Security" has been realised to fulfill the principal opinions and roles of young people towards achieving food security. Attaining food security is significant and growing challenge in developing world and highly critical to alleviating poverty. Moreover, the outcomes guided by this selected theme are expected to contribute favorably in youth knowledge, skills, and talents development as well as the society as a whole.

This Conference will focus on increasing the availability of food, improving access to food, increasing accessibility to quality nutritious food, increase stability of food security and supporting improved governance of the global food system. The outcome document will also enhance youth contribution towards the attainment of the 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).

OBJECTIVES

During the Global Food Security Conference all participants will gather to address and call for action on the following objectives:

- To promote awareness, analyse problems, and list programmes, services, facilities and resources available towards achieving food security;
- To identify the roles and contribution of different sectors i.e. public sector, private sector, NGOs and others, in solving food security;

- To gather and select good practices, challenges, experiences, and lessons learnt from the national youth councils towards improving or amending the current policies in order to attain food security;
- To form and advance the national, regional, and international policies governing the issues related to food security;
- To foster networking, collaboration, and partnership among youth and all stakeholders in order to address the issue of food security;
- To advance the role of youth and actively involve them in the social development and attainment of Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).
